USAI® Lighting received "The Spirit of Innovation Award" presented by the Orange County Partnership. The Upstate New York-based group cited USAI's exceptional initiatives in research, development and engineering that have led to the innovative concept and new era of Personalized Lighting.

In accepting the award, Bonnie Littman, President and CEO of USAI Lighting said, "We are thrilled to be honored by the Orange County Partnership for fearlessly staying ahead of the technology curve and designing products that provide Personalized Lighting without compromise. We're especially proud to be recognized among other outstanding citizens and companies in this community that reflect the diversity of economic growth being experienced here. Hudson Valley was home to Thomas Edison's first electric generating station, and we are proud to uphold his lighting legacy while contributing to the economic development of this county."

USAI Lighting is an acknowledged pioneer of LED technology that allows people to adjust color and choose from a variety of outputs, beam angles, trim sizes and more, for Personalized Lighting that stimulates the senses, reinforces health and enhances everyday life. The company defines Personalized Lighting as lighting that changes as people do – as they work, play, create, and live; and based on how they want to look, how they want to feel, and where they are.

"USAI has invested their time, talent and treasure for decades in the research, development and engineering of innovative and personalized lighting products. The Littman family is committed to keeping and growing their business in Orange County, NY increasing the number of high quality jobs. No one is more deserving than the Littman family for their monumental contributions," said Maureen Halahan, President and CEO of the Orange County Partnership.
